When a student goes home from school and decides she wants to do further research on the day's lesson, it is clear her teacher ignited a love of learning in her.

The teachers who are piloting the Park Hill School District's Future Learner Project, or FLiP, report that this kind of excitement about learning is the new norm in their classrooms. FLiP is creating more student-centered classrooms, where teachers act as facilitators and students take ownership of their learning.

In addition to core skills like language arts and mathematics, teachers are also focusing on 21st-century skills like critical thinking, communication, collaboration, problem solving, creativity and research. They are giving students a deeper understanding of the curriculum than ever before. The tool that allows them to do this is technology, which is why the fifth-grade classrooms at Line Creek, Renner and Southeast elementaries now have laptop computers for every student. The students take their laptops home at night to do homework and extend their learning.

This fifth-grade pilot program is one of the first stages in a four-year implementation of FLiP, which will end with the student-centered, technology-fueled instruction in every classroom across the school district.

Renner fifth grade teacher Lindsay Koerner helps a student with his critical thinking skills using his assigned laptop. Renner is part of the FLiP pilot.

There are also pilot classrooms in the middle schools and high schools, where teachers are using technology tools to change their instruction.

For FLiP to succeed, not only will Park Hill need to find funding for all the technology, but it will need to provide technical support.

Most importantly, Park Hill will need to provide ongoing training for teachers. This will help them teach students the 21st-century skills that employers demand.

Park Hill School District teachers collaborated recently to align Park Hill's curriculum with the national Common Core standards. Their work will prepare us for coming changes.

To Prepare Students for Future, Park Hill Aligns Curriculum with Common Core

In the Park Hill School District, "building successful futures" is not just a catch phrase.

Park Hill educators work every day to prepare students to succeed at college and in their careers.

In order to prepare students to be successful in their lives after graduation, Park Hill works to make sure that the lessons taught in our classrooms are rigorous and relevant to students' futures.

For many years, Park Hill educators have fine-tuned our district curriculum.

Now, in an effort to better prepare students for the future, our teachers are working hard to make sure our district curriculum is aligned with the Common Core State Standards.

"Common Core provides us with consistent, national standards that have the rigor and the focus on college and career readiness that we are looking for here in Park Hill," said Dr. Jennifer Corum, director of curriculum.

These standards were developed as a partnership between states, so although they do not come from the federal government, 48 states have adopted them.

As soon as the Missouri Department of Elementary and Secondary Education announced that it would adopt the Common Core standards, Park Hill got to work aligning our curriculum.

We are also providing training to teachers to prepare them for the transition. Teachers are learning about Common Core at regional meetings with other school districts and at local sessions in their own schools.

If the Board of Education approves the new, aligned curriculum in December, students will see the changes in the classroom in the 2013-2014 school year.

The curriculum will change for every grade level, from kindergarten through 12th grade, in math and English language arts. There will be some impact on science and social studies as well.

In the spring of 2015, the state assessment that Park Hill students take will cover the Common Core standards.

Dr. Jeff Klein, Park Hill's assistant superintendent for academic services, said aligning our standards with Common Core allows Park Hill to make sure that the learning in each grade level builds on the learning from the year before.

The national standards will encourage more collaboration and knowledge sharing across states, and there will be more research and development in resources to support the standards.

Along with our Future Learner Project, or FLIP (see page 1), aligning our curriculum with the Common Core will prepare students for successful futures by teaching creativity, cooperation, innovation and problem-solving.

Park Hill South High School Receives 2012 National Blue Ribbon Award

Park Hill South High School is one of 269 schools in the nation to earn the 2012 National Blue Ribbon Award.

US Secretary of Education Arne Duncan announced the winners this fall, and South is the only school in the Kansas City area to earn this award and one of only five schools in the state of Missouri.

South was eligible for this award because it received the Missouri Gold Star School award earlier this year.

The National Blue Ribbon Schools award honors public and private elementary, middle and high schools where students perform at very high levels or where significant improvements are made in student achievement.

Park Hill South High School was chosen in the exemplary high performing category because its achievement scores are among the highest in the state.

"This is a fantastic recognition of the collaborative efforts of our school team to make Park Hill South a great place for our kids," Principal Dr. Dale Longenecker said.

NEWS WORTH KNOWING

Important Information from the Park Hill District

Kansas City Mayor Sly James visited Southeast Elementary as part of his Turn the Page KC initiative and read to Mrs. Groomes' third-grade students.

Board Appoints Todd Burr to Fill Vacancy:

The Park Hill Board of Education appointed Todd Burr to fill the vacant seat on the Board left by the resignation of Fred Sanchez. Burr will serve on the Board until April, when the community will elect someone to fill the remaining two years of Sanchez's term.

Board Hears Progress Report on Projects from 2011 Bond Issue:

Many of the projects from the April 2011 bond issue are already complete, including the construction of Tiffany Ridge Elementary. The projects are under budget and ahead of schedule.

Construction of classroom additions and renovations at Park Hill High School and Congress Middle School is underway. Construction will wrap up this summer on safety entrances and other needed improvements at English Landing and Union Chapel elementary schools and Lakeview Middle School. Classroom additions and renovations at Park Hill South will also take place this summer, as will the addition of a canopy to the entrance of Renner and improvements to the parking lot at Southeast.

While the city of Kansas City closes 72nd Street next to Plaza Middle School in the summer to widen it, the district will reconfigure the parking lot to try to lessen traffic headaches.

District Partners with Turn the Page KC:

Park Hill School District is one of four districts in Kansas City, Mo. that are partnering with Mayor Sly James' office to implement the Turn the Page KC initiative to increase reading proficiency city-wide. With some assistance from this project, Park Hill is working on a new after-school tutoring program. If you would like to volunteer as a YouthFriend to help with the tutoring sessions, contact Britney Compton, (816) 359-6062.
